

Honey Wine in Ethiopian Languages

Here is a list of Ethiopian languages and their words for "honey wine" and "honey." Note frequent similarities: Some are cognates, or words that evolved from a common ancestor, and some represent borrowing. More than one word may appear for a language because of the difficulty of transliterating the words into English, or because different linguists have recorded different words. Where linguists have identified a dialect with a different word, I have created a line for that data.

The presence of a word in a language doesn't necessarily mean the culture drinks honey wine. Some cultures make honey beer or other fermented drinks, and Moslem cultures tend not to drink it. I have noted those instances. The languages come from Ethnologue and the words from linguists. Where you see a symbol (●), this indicates that I have not yet found the word for honey wine in that language. There are only two such gaps in this list of 93 languages: Kachama-Ganjule and Nayi, both little-studied Omotic languages, so they may always remain a mystery.
